Town Officials' Vigilance in Upholding Local Laws-Personal Items. Special Correspondence of The Evening Star.

GAITHERSBURG, Md., July 29, 1902. Within the past week the town council, through the bailiffs, has instituted a vigorous crusade against what appears to be a growing disregard of a number of the sanitary laws and town ordinances. Mr. N. A. Pierce was arrested yesterday and arraigned before Justice Israel Warfield, charged by Bailiff Francis T. Cahill with violating the bicycle regulations. He pleaded guilty, and paid a fine of $1 and costs. This was the third similar case of infraction of a town ordinance, the same efficer making the arrest in each. The town council has instructed its subordinate officials to show no favor in the matter of executing the laws.

Special Correspondence of The Evening Star. BOYD'S, Md., July 29, 1902. Lightning struck the telephone wires during a storm at Kemptown, Frederick county, a few miles west of Hyattstown, this county, Monday evening, and passed into the store of Clarence Davis of that place, setting fire to the outside of the weatherboarding, and in a few moments the entire store was enveloped in flames. The citizens of the little village responded quickly, but all they were able to save was one show case. The entire stock of goods was burned with the store house. The books were fortunately taken out by Mr. Davis Saturday night when he closed the store and were saved. The stock of goods was worth about $1,700; insurance, $1,300. The store property was owned by Rufus Purdman of King's Valley, this county, and was valued at about $600. There is a little insurance on the building. Mrs. John Moore was yesterday arrested by Deputy Sheriff Howard White of Barnesville and brought before Justice Norris, who had her committed to jail at Rockville until a preliminary hearing may be held here Friday next at 10 o'clock. CLERKS ARE IMPROVED.

Them by Creditors. "One side issue of the civil service in fixing the tenure of clerks in the executive departments upon good behavior, instead of the old spoils system of political influence, which may be said to have accrued beneficially to the clerks and to Washington as a city, is the decrease of complaints against clerks by creditors, such as storekeepers, etc.," said a chief clerk this morning.

"As chief clerk these complaints are re-dealings with tradesmen, landlords and money lenders, and I have known of one clerk owing as high as several thousand dollars. If they lost their positions they left town and they were that much ahead, while the other fellows were that much out. "But these complaints have lessened to an appreciable degree. One or two of the departments have issued stringent rules which in effect inform the clerk that if he cannot pay his just debts he cannot expect to hold his position. This somewhat of a threat. however, has not been followed by the other departments, mine, for instance, where we feel that we may control our force without resort to such drastic measures. We absolutely refuse, however, to be made col-lection agencies, yet we differentiate in the kinds of debts. Money lending sharks get scant courtesy around here. Where a debt is for the necessaries of life we sometimes look into the matter and endeavor to effect settlement, or where a clerk becomes what we call a 'chronic,' and I am glad to say that there are not many, we will call him up. There is always the other side to these matters, and we do not permit ourselves to be used as tools for people who have grievances. Some of the tales we hear are "Some people for unaccountable reasons seem to think that because their creditor 'works for the government' they can injure him by going 'down to the department and seeing about it.' This is about all the satisfaction they get in most cases. Government clerks get into financial difficulties the same as any other class of wage earners, and because a clerk owes a fev it in nowise detracts from his clerical capacity if he is not dishonest.

"Money lenders and '10 percenters' have been pretty well squelched in the depart-ments, and it is a good thing for the city when these sharks would stand in the corridors outside of disbursing officers' rooms, wa. for their victims to show up in line and then pounce upon them. If we catch any of these gentry around our line of clerks we have them run out of the building. This remedy is effective, otherwise they make themselves not only a nulsance, but a preferential class of creditors on their own motion

Both the clerks who allow themselves to be bled by the money lenders and the lat-ter we class in the same category in that neither gets any sympathy in the event of a loss. Clerks as a great class, however, let these chaps severely alone. In this re-spect the department clerks of Washington have improved, if I may use the word in this connection, over the clerks of twenty years ago under the old free and easy spoils system."

MUSCULAR DEVELOPMENT.

Decrease in the Complaints Against The New Method is a Great Improvement on the Old. "In this day of lightning changes of things mundane none is more marked to those who have become acquainted therewith than the upsetting of the old theories as regards physical training, muscle building, gymnastic work and other forms of exercise in general to increase the bodily strength and improve the health," said a Washington athlete.

"Those of us who are in middle life look ferred to me in my department, and in the back upon the days when nearly every man other departments it is the chief clerks who had a set of dumbbells or Indian clubs in attend to such matters except in a case of his room, which he would use vigorously special importance, where serious charges are made against a clerk, and the case is carried to the head of the bureau, the asand religiously for one week and then as religiously stop for the following sixteen weeks. Then came the innumerable pulley sistant secretary, and at times to head of weights and elastic cords to be attached to the door jam, the punching bag and a the department for final action, so I have noted the point in question with much inscore of other devices, appliances and forms terest. Some years ago when the positions of exercise primarily intended for the busiof clerks were comparatively insecure many ness man, the office and indoor worker, but of the clerks were unscrupulous in their supposed to be good for all mankind. Thousands and thousands of men, old and young, have valiently started out to build up their muscular system and general health, and have gradually or suddenly abandoned their efforts with all sorts of excuses for their apostacy and the disruption of their good resolutions. In a majority of cases the 'exercise' was found to work which was too severe upon the heart or system generally, and when voluntary exercise becomes physical labor it is quickly abandoned. "The same has been true of exercise in gymnasiums-too violent in general effect and too severe upon the heart or lungs. The class of men who patronize gymnasiums, as a rule, have weak muscular structure and organic conditions, and they look to gymnastics as a means to physical recuperation, while the sturdy young man working at his trade gets enough and often more muscular exercise than he requires and has no need to go to the 'gym' to develop his muscles. "While not decrying gymnastic, dumbbell and pulley work to those who wish it, as it is all right in moderation, the new and simple theory of exercise for the acquire ment of muscular development without weights or appliances of any kind puts all other forms of exercise out of business at once and forever. It is not easy to explain lucidly in a few lines, but the principle is based upon making and keeping the muscles tense and upon setting one set of muscles at work against the other. "Thus, for a single exercise, with the fingers extended, muscles tense, the forearm is brought up and down slowly just as though a dumbbell were clenched in the fist. muscles are kept tense and a slight vibratory or shaking motion is given to the arm, as though a weight were being lifted. It is the muscular tension which drives out the slowly circulating blood, infuses the muscles with new blood and enlarges them. Under the old system of exercise the fist was clenched and the arms swung or jerked out and back from the joints, accomplishing but litle real benefit, fatiguing the subject, jarring the body and accelerating the heart's action. "The effect upon the muscles by this tension and slow motion when the various exercises are understood is simply terrific and can be repeated but a few times at first, yet the heart is increased in action but little and there are no permanent after effects of evil. The action of the tense muscles is so great, in fact, that less than a dozen movements to the novice tires him out, but it is only a short time before general improvement is noticeable, and the exercise is accomplished without a jar or shake to the body or so much as the lifting of the weight of a lead pencil.

"The principle of the modern methods of muscle building is not new in discovery but only in application, and it is essentially scientific. The old, time-honored, laborious arm-swinging and muscle-jerking gymnas tics is a refined elaboration of the known results which follow physical exercise by those whose occupations call for it. The new method contracts and hardens the muscles, sets up a reorganization of the tissues and a rejuvenation of the organic system, producing sleep, weight, appetite and renewed energy just as working in the open air does, yet much quicker and with

In short, in the twentieth century we for years but put into practice within a recent period, and not yet generally under-stood. Such is life; there is nothing new."

BURIAL OF MRS. COX.

Funeral Services Held in M. E.

Residents of the section about Oxon Hill, Prince George's county, Md., gathered in large numbers yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at the Methodist Episcopal Church in that village, to participate in the funeral ceremonies over the remains of Mrs. Cora V. Cox, the wife of Irwin B. Cox, who committed suicide Sunday afternoon at her home in lower Giesboro' by shooting herself through the head with a revolver. Mrs.

Cox, who was twenty-nine years old, was one of the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Silas Talbert of Oxon Hill, Md., highly respected people in that locality, and was known to almost all the village people residing there. Rev. Wm. L. Lynn, formerly paster of the Oxon Hill Methodist Church, now of this city, conducted a simple service and spoke briefly over the remains. The casket containing the body of the unfortunate woman was covered with numerous floral pleces, sent by sympathetic friends of the family. Her husband and the two little children sat in their places among the mourners. The pallbearers were Henry Grimes, Enoch Hunt, Joseph Jeffers and Alfred Grimes.

After the church service the remains were interred in the cemetery adjoining the build-ing. The shocking act of Mrs. Cox in de-stroying her life fell with appalling force upon the parents of the woman. They had left their home at Oxon Hill Sunday with the intention of spending the remainder of the day with her. When within a few moments' drive of the house they were met with the intelligence of what had occurred, and the visit that was to be a pleasant meeting was transformed into the mournfulest of scenes. Had the parents arrived a little earlier the tragedy would have been averted.

The Simpson home, in which Mrs. Cox fired the fatal shot, is a house of historic interest. Tradition has it that it was constructed of brick sent from England more than a century ago. It is known as the old Young homestead of later times. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox were at one time em ployes of St. Elizabeth's Asylum.

"OLD CURIOSITY SHOP." There Are Several of Them in This City.

"When Dickens entitled one of his most interesting and famous of novels 'The Old Curiosity Shop' he must have had in mind, in connection with the little shop on the narrow, winding London street near the new law courts, so intimately connected with the associations of Little Nell, that peculiar characteristic of us all that outcrops in our natures in the form of an intense loving to linger in front of the windows of what are known as 'curiosity shops,' but which are in reality places where a curious mixture and conglomeration of goods are sold at low rates, either at first or second hand," said an elderly Washington literary man.

"There are several of these shops in the capital, and when men will pause before no other window and idle they will stop at these places and run over with the eye the different articles behind the plate glass, mentally noting the prices tagged thereon, and 'sizing them up' as to whether they are cheap or dear. As for the small boy, I well remember that I used to go blocks out of my way to feast my youthful eyes upon the treasures thrown promiscuously in the win-dow, and many of my pennies found their way over the counter of the shop for ar-ticles for which I had no earthly use, but without which the carth seemed a dreary waste. Judging from the way the Washington small boy of today hungrily peers into the windows of our own curiosity shops there has been but little change either in the shops or in the boy.

"You see, if we pause before the window of a grocery, hardware or dry goods store we know in advance about what sort of things we are to see, and unless we are especially interested we pass on. But this is not true of the window of the curiosity shop, hence, the facination to that latent element of the pure savage still in our natures-the attraction of the eye by baubles and bright things. So we look and look, our curiosity is appeased, and the barbarian instinct within us is satisfied. "I am sure that the general public has little conception of the strange diversity of articles to be seen in the window of a curi-osity shop, to say nothing of the interior of the shop itself. I made a mental note the other day of only a portion of the con-tents of one window, and it ought to throw any small boy reader of The Star into conulsions of envious frenzy to possess them.

Here it is: "Pocket knives of all sorts, from a 'single-blader' to one with a score of blades with a pearl handle; an old cavalry sabre, piles of confederate money, an 8 per cent $500 confederate bond, two men-of-war boarding cutlasses, probably used in the war of 1812; a pair of revolutionary flintlock dueling pistols, old and new shot guns, a pair of solid silver spurs, probably the property of some Mexican horseman; horse whips, handcuffs, roller skates, a couple of 'black jacks,' or slung shots; brass knuck-les, bowie knife, revolvers of all kinds and ages, from the modern hammerless to the old ante-bellum percussion-cap variety; carved idol from the south Pacific seas, rubber house balls, base balls at all prices, bats, stage sword, penny savings banks, bike fixings of all kinds, hardware of all sorts from, a paper of tacks to a heavy carpenter's plane; a watch said to have been owned by George Washington; fishing tackle in enticing variety, poker chips, dice, checkers, playing cards, back gammon, razors and strops, thermometers, banjos, violins, mandolins, a carved walrus tusk from Alaska, watch chains, watches and jewelry in endless variety, white washing and paint brushes, accordeons and lots of other things from which small boys and o'd
